INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

The United Nations designated 1979 as the IYC with UNICEF accorded administrative responsibility for its observance. As stated in the Resolution, the objective is to awaken people to the needs of children and to "encourage all countries to review their programs for the promotion of the well-being of children and to mobilize support for national and local action programs according to each country's conditions, needs and priorities ..." The Year will emphasize:

Child advocacy and children's rights;
Consciousness-raising among decision makers & the public regarding the special needs of children, and
The integration of programs for children into the mainstream of national economic and social development plans.

Educators have been especially encouraged to respond.

A thoughtful article on the stereotyping of disabled people in comic books and the effect of this sterotyped presentation on the young reader. Following a survey of comics and their readers, the authors determined that "The physically disabled were represented as either good or evil. There were no average or ordinary yet physically different characters... This continued misrepresentation of the disabled only makes it more difficult for the disabled to be accepted..."
